SUMMARY

The course aims at offering a specialized approach to fascism, understood as a complex and multifaceted historical phenomenon. This political culture not only constituted an inescapable point of reference in the interwar period, but also continues today to exert a great attraction both on research and, more generally, on public opinion. To this end, its cultural origins, its construction processes and its evolution, continuities and transformations in the different contexts of interwar Europe will be examined. Special attention will be paid to theoretical and historiographical debates, cultural, transnational and gender perspectives.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

The course is divided into theoretical and practical sessions (20 hours each). The lecturers' explanations and the individual and group assignments (oral presentations, comments on sources) will be combined with tasks at home (readings) and discussion and active participation of students in the classroom

EVALUATION

- Assignments (70%). The specific subject matter of both papers must be agreed with the respective lecturer in the first weeks of each part of the course.
- Participation (20%): active and well-argued participation in class, on a regular basis throughout the term.
- Attendance (10%)

Throughout the whole course, a correct expression from the expository and formal point of view will be essential. Likewise, in the written activities the lack of clarity in the writing, as well as of a correct spelling and expression will subtract a grade; according to agreement of the Faculty, the accumulation of faults may lead to failure in the subject.

In case of plagiarism (total or partial) or use of artificial intelligence programs, in addition to further academic sanctions, the final grade for the whole course will be 0.
