SUMMARY

The main aim of this course is to provide a first approach to the complex reality of social deviance and crime in contemporary societies, especially in Western societies, but taking into account the different globalizing mechanisms in place. This objective implies taking into account (not only as a political and practical necessity, but also theoretical and analytical), the processes of social definition of normality, the generation of conflicts and the integrating capacity of the social order that works through mechanisms of formal and informal control increasingly focused on disciplines of modulation of subjectivities. LEARNING OUTCOMES

A.R.-21. Recognizes the interdependencies between the social construction of normality and deviance, as well as distinguishes the analytical differences between the concepts of social deviance, crime, and social exclusion.

A.R.-22. Identifies the understanding of the different sociological theories that have analyzed social deviance and the intervention strategies (political-practical application level) derived from each one of them.

A.R.-23. Know how to frame the changes produced in the field of social control, both formal and informal, in its social and historical context in order to make visible the links between the generation of conflicts and the integrating capacity of the social order.

A.R.-24. Distinguishes the differences between different statistical sources and surveys that provide data on social deviance and crime, especially between self-incrimination surveys and victimization surveys.

A.R.-25. Is able to analyze the structural causes of social deviance and crime, referring to patterns of social inequality and stratification along gender, generational and class lines. Resultats d'aprenentatge.
