TEACHING METHODOLOGY

The development of the subject follows the next structure:

In the theoretical classes' time analysis techniques will be developed, text study, understanding of basic concepts of the subject and debates on the questions raised in each subject.

In the practical classes' time the materials made with examples will appear that will explain the theory. Therefore, the methodology takes shape in the following process:

A) Concerning work in groups:

1. Constitution of the team and distribution of the themes.
2. Analysis of materials, bibliographical search, etc. for the extension in annexes that complete the better understanding of the themes.
3. Elaboration of questions of reflection on subjects and short items of multiple choice answers.
4. Construction of a good practice for each theme supported by audio-visual material.

5. Theoretical work guided by the professor.
6. Presentation of the practices of each theme.
7. Debate of each theme.

B) Individual work:

8. Reading and study of each theme.
9. Answer to the reflection questions of each theme before the practice's presentation of the corresponding theme.
10. Active Participation in the class debates.
11. Written test.

The methodology to use will contemplate the following modalities: guiding readings, cooperative work, study of cases, text debates, commentary, programmes' planning. In all the process will be present the use of new technologies through the online inclusion of the theoretical and practical works, the establishment of individual virtual tutoring time, and a forum for information exchanges and debates.

EVALUATION

The evaluation process will have a continuous character, formative and, at the same time, participating. Consequently it will be carried out from the individual and group perspective, considering results of learning of the subject. As the attendance is considered obligatory, it is possible to be valued, in this sense, the online participation in the forums or the tutoring time.

It will be an examination, collected individual activities and a group work will be done.
