SUMMARY

The subject INCLUSIVE EDUCATION seeks to help deepen the professional training of future pedagogues in the field of diversity, undoubtedly one of the greatest innovations that have compromised and enriched contemporary education systems.

From the approaches of the Department of Comparative Education and History of Education, this optional subject offers a vision of the principles, theories, cultures, policies and practices that are vertebrating the educational attention of students in all the diversity of their capacities, limitations and needs.

In the same way, the subject invites to deepen in the analysis that concretizes those practical proposals referred to specific sectors: people with functional diversity, students with unfavorable environments, immigrants, students with high capacities, ... and this, not only in the levels of formal education, but in the non-formal education, as well as in those stages previous to the educational system and the formation throughout life.

In short, pedagogical training is offered to analyze, design, apply and evaluate educational policies, organizations and practices - local, national and international- that lead to the establishment of a truly inclusive society.

Finally, it bases the research, analysis and evaluation of documentary sources -legislative, institutional, practices, research- that make this educational invariant concrete, with the purpose of affirming the values, attitudes and criteria that must guide the professional practice of future pedagogical professionals.
