TEACHING METHODOLOGY

There will be three hours of face-to-face lessons per week, i.e., activity in the regular classroom of the subject or group. These hours will be distributed as follows:

- Theoretical sessions constitute 2/3 of the total face-to-face hours (30 hours/course, two hours per week). During them, the teacher will present and explain those fundamental elements that should guide the students in understanding the subject in question.
- Practical sessions make up 1/3 of the total number of classroom hours (15 hours/course, one hour per week). During this time, the most important or significant aspects of the subject will be studied in depth, using different materials. The sessions will be used to introduce students to the use of the materials and techniques of the historical discipline and, specifically, of the specific sources for the study of the history of the contemporary world after 1945.

PREPARING THEORETICAL LESSONS consists of compulsory reading of manuals, monographs or texts as indicated by the faculty, as well as their participation in class.

PREPARING PRACTICAL WORK consists of the obligatory reading of the indicated bibliography, the work of analysis on the documentation and sources around the topic of study and, if applicable, the writing of practical works.

COMPLEMENTARY ACTIVITIES will be devoted to the viewing, consultation and subsequent discussion and sharing around audiovisual, graphic, documentary, literary or other materials, chosen by the teacher and of special relevance for the understanding of certain topics or aspects of the program. Likewise, attendance to exhibitions, conferences, round tables, etc. can be programmed.

TUTORIALS

a) Scheduled tutorials:

Where appropriate, the professor may communicate the realization of a series of interviews with the students for the follow-up of the different activities of the course.

b) Unscheduled tutorials: The students of a group may attend the hours of attention to students that each professor has in general, to make inquiries about any topic or aspect related to the subject.

EVALUATION

The evaluation criteria and procedures applied to this subject will be as follows:

1.- Final exam. It will deal with the contents of the program. The following aspects will be evaluated:

- Level of knowledge in accordance with the objectives of the course.
- Correct written expression, both from the expository and formal point of view, as well as from the terminological point of view. Clear writing and correct spelling will be essential.
- Ability to relate and reasoning.

The grade obtained in this section will amount to 70% of the course's final grade. The Annex to the Teaching Guide of each group will specify the minimum grade of the exam necessary to be able to add the results of the remaining evaluation criteria.

2. Further assignments may consist of the realization of a control on the readings determined by the teacher, the writing of a paper analysing some of these readings, or the development of a work from certain available sources (memories of the time, literary texts, graphic material, feature films and audiovisual material, etc.) proposed and commented by the teacher in the theoretical classes, practices or complementary activities. In the case of the papers, the work of documentary compilation and critical evaluation of these readings or sources will be valued, as well as the quality, if applicable, of the exposition of the work carried out in class.

The lecturer may also evaluate the student's active participation in the classes or activities.

The grade obtained in this section will represent 30% of the final grade of the course.

To pass the subject, it will be essential to demonstrate an ability in written expression and a command of spelling appropriate to the level of higher education.

The second call has the same requirements and percentages as the first call. The grades obtained throughout the course in the assignments or other activities will be taken into account for the grade of the second call. Due to their nature and design, the activities (reading control, work, complementary activities, practices and, obviously, active participation in class) are not recoverable.

Grades will only be kept during the current academic year.

Likewise, specific indications on the dynamics of each group may be presented as an appendix at the beginning of the course by the lecturer.
