TEACHING METHODOLOGY

- The classes will foster active participation by students, and will combine theoretical and practical work.
- Complementary activities will be organized, either by the Faculty or by professors who teach the course in the different groups.

For further details see annexes to the teaching guide.

EVALUATION

The final assessment will result from the evaluation of the various tests and activities along the course: a) a final test consisting of questions related to the subject taught and recommended reading. b) Practical activities and they evaluated throughout the course. c) Attendance and active participation in classes and other activities. In short: Final exam 60% ; reading tests or practical work (a maximum of 2 in total) 30% ;

complementary activities (attending and delivery of a written report) 10% Note: a minimum score of 4 in the exam is required in order to incorporate the marks of other activities.

The marks for complementary activities will be saved until the second call of the same academic year.

Excepting Erasmus students, grammar and spelling mistakes will score negatively on the qualification of all written tests and academic works. Their accumulation may lead to a failing grade in the course.
