SUMMARY

Sociology of Law is a basic formation course in first year Degree in Criminology. It has a charge of 6 ECTS credits and is taught during the second semester. Its content is related in part to the subject Research Methods in Social Sciences (second semester), and can be considered a continuing relationship with the subject of Introduction to Sociology (first semester).

The general content of the course is oriented on several basic dimensions: Law and Society. Social relations and norms. Sociological analysis of law and legal institutions. Sociology of juridical operators. Methodology and socio-juridical research. Legal cultures.

This general thematic highlights its interdisciplinary character and reaffirms the position of criminology connected to the generic set of social sciences.

In the words of Eugen Ehrlich "is impossible to teach law without simultaneously provide an image of society which must govern." This dictum of Ehrlich extends to all the social sciences. Our interest is to also emphasize in the current processes of social and historical change.
