SUMMARY

This subject studies some of the most relevant institutions conventionally situated within the so-called special part of Administrative Law. We will study the non-contractual civil liability of Public Administrations, public procurement, the legal regime for public employment, public assets regulation and the most important types of administrative activity. Finally, as reference sectors where administrative action is of particular importance, we will analyse the legal regime of administrative intervention in relation to economic activity and environmental protection.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

Presentation of theoretical content of the subject. Each lecturer will explain the fundamental elements that should guide students in the study and understanding of the subject. The student, for his or her part, must actively engage in the learning process by reading, prior to the lecturer's explanation, the materials, manuals, monographs or texts provided or previously indicated. These face-to-face classes are the privileged vehicle for the transmission of knowledge in an orderly and coherent manner, emphasising the most basic and structural issues, as well as the more complex ones that require more attention or explanation. During these sessions, in addition, the teaching team in charge will be available to students to resolve doubts and clarify concepts.

Applied activities and practices: These activities will consist in commenting on judgements, rulings or other materials to ensure their complete and correct understanding, as well as the resolution of practical cases or equivalent activities, through which students must develop the aforementioned competences. Through these activities, students will be introduced to and accustomed to the use of materials and techniques specific to the discipline.

These activities will be carried out as a complement to the lecturer's presentation of theoretical knowledge. They can also be carried out outside the time allocated to classroom explanation of the subject, either prior to the classroom lecture or after it. They will be participatory and each teacher will indicate, where appropriate, which ones will be assessed as part of the continuous assessment, under what conditions and according to which criteria.

Complementary activities: Each lecturer responsible for the subject will participate in at least one workshop or, alternatively, will hold a course or seminar related to the subject (at the day or days assigned for this purpose), which will be scheduled in the context of the subject and will preferably consist of activities specific to the subject or of an interdisciplinary or cross-disciplinary nature. These activities, whenever possible, will be carried out in coordination with groups of the same subject or with other subjects. In any case, these activities will form part of the content to be assessed in the continuous assessment.

Directed activities: Both for the monitoring of the theoretical exposition and the performance of the applied activities, the lecturer will indicate which readings, search of sentences or preparation of cases, etc., must be carried out by the student. Although it is not the subject of classroom work, the lecturer may also schedule, within the student's workload, other activities that serve to reinforce or review the knowledge acquired by the student.

Attendance at tutorials and individualised attention to students: In order to make enquiries on any subject or aspect related to the subject and its work dynamics, students may attend, during the timetable set by each lecturer, the tutorials and other areas of individualised attention designed in the appendix to the teaching guide. In any case, the timetables and modalities of tutoring and attention will have to respect the minimums established by the Universitat de València, either in its face-to-face format, or in the cases in which they are carried out on-line.
