SUMMARY

I. INTRODUCTION

The diverse Syllabus of the Studies of Degree include information on both teaching and learning processes according to the model established and recommended by the 'Unidad de Innovacion Educativa' of the 'Universitat de València – Estudi General' (which contains, amongst other aspects, competences and learning results).

This document represents the Syllabus of the compulsory Public International Law course. As established by the academic-teaching Protocol on the Degrees of the Faculty of Law of the 'Universitat de València – Estudi General' (henceforth, the Protocol), page 4, this Syllabus has been prepared by the Knowledge Area of Public International Law and International Relations and approved by the Academic Commission on the Law Title (henceforth, CAT-Law).

This Syllabus shall be applied in all the groups of the Public International Law subject, regardless of the Degree of the Universitat de València – Estudi General in which they are given.

Lecturers of a group on Public International Law shall attach to this Syllabus the Program of activities envisaged. This Program entails a high level of specification of the contents of the Syllabus. Anyway, it should be pointed out that the Protocol states in page 5 that 'the Program of activities of the Lecturer shall not contradict the Syllabus that it develops'.

II. BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE SUBJECT

The Verifica (that is, the former academic Syllabus) of the Law Degree (page 82) establishes the following:

CONTENTS OF THE MODULE / SUBJECT AND OBSERVATIONS

Contents of the Public International Law subject:

International society and subjects of Public International Law. Creation and application of international norms. Peaceful settlement of international disputes. Functions of Public International Law.

Observations:

The teaching Programs of all the groups of the Public International Law subject shall comply with the Syllabus prepared by the Area of Public International Law and International Relations

III. POSITION OF THE COURSE IN THE ACADEMIC SYLLABUS

The course Public International Law is given throughout two terms not only of the second year of the Law Degree and the double Degree on Law-Political Science, but also of the third year of the double Degree on Law- Business Administration and Management and the double Degree on Law- Criminology.

As the `Verifica` of the Law Degree of the Universitat de València – Estudi General lays down, this subject has special connections with other subjects.

Regarding the Law Degree, it has to be borne in mind that a good knowledge of Public International Law is required to achieve an appropriate understanding of the subject Legal Institutions of the European Union. Secondly, two optional subjects of the International Legal itinerary (International Environmental Law and International Humanitarian Law) are specialities of the Public International Law Course. Finally, it should be pointed out the transversal character of the subject due to the constant expansion of the material contents of international norms. Therefore, in every legal subject there are international norms that discipline and regulate its contents.

That is also the case in the double Degree in Law– Business Administration and Management. Hence, a good knowledge of Public International Law is required to achieve an appropriate understanding of the subject Legal Institutions of the European Union. In addition, it should be pointed out the transversal character of the subject due to the constant expansion of the material content of international norms. Therefore, in every legal subject there are international norms that discipline and regulate its contents.

For what it has to do with the double Degree in Law– Political Science, it should also be taken into account that a good knowledge of Public International Law is required to achieve an appropriate understanding of the subject Institutions and Politics of the European Union. Secondly, the contents of the basic annual subject International Relations and Organizations are closely connected with the subject Public International Law. International relations entail the study of the international social environment, and this knowledge contributes to a better understanding of the characters of Public International Law. International Organizations are well-established subjects of International Law, and their deep knowledge is a speciality of this course. Thirdly, it should be noted that the compulsory course on Human Rights and International Cooperation is a speciality of the subject on Public International Law. Finally, it should be pointed out the transversal character of the subject due to the constant expansion of the material contents of international norms. Therefore, in every legal subject there are international norms that discipline and regulate its contents.

Lastly, it should be taken into account that the Public International Law course is also given in the double Degree in Law–Criminology. Once again, it should also be taken into account that a good knowledge of Public International Law is required to achieve an appropriate understanding of the subject Legal Institutions of the European Union. Moreover, the optional subject International Criminal Law is a speciality of the Public International Law course. Again, it should be pointed out the transversal character of the subject due to the constant expansion of the material contents of international norms. Therefore, in every legal subject there are international norms that discipline and regulate its contents.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

Theoretical classes will last 38 hours and will be split in sessions of 100 and 50 minutes of effective in-class teaching. Theoretical classes are considered as part of the formative activities that integrate in-class teaching. This implies that attendance of both the Lecturer and the students is compulsory. Hence, no Lecturer shall give theoretical classes virtually.

In the first session of theoretical classes, each Lecturer shall introduce the group to the contents of the different formative activities that are planned (formative activities are theoretical classes, applied classes, complementary activities and exams, supervised activities and autonomous work. All of them are explained in the present section of this syllabus), his/her schedule and the evaluation system to be followed. Therefore, students are expected to bring to the first class both this syllabus and the Annex containing the Program of Activities planned by the Lecturer. Both documents will be available at the virtual classroom and in the webpage of the Department of International Law Adolfo Miaja de la Muela.

In the remaining sessions of theoretical classes, each Lecturer shall explain the teaching program of the subject (see supra section 6). In theoretical classes the whole teaching program will not be dealt with, as they will be devoted to fundamental ideas of each lesson. However, it shall be underlined that the whole teaching program will be evaluated through the global exam (see infra section 9).

Each Lecturer shall use the methodology that he/she considers more appropriate, usually by combining different educational methods. Not only some master classes can exceptionally be given, but also a lesson can be dealt with by starting from the students' doubts or questions, or even commenting on certain legal texts (individually or in groups), etc.

Applied classes will last 25 hours and they are also considered as part of the formative activities that integrate in-class teaching. This implies that attendance of both the Lecturer and the students is compulsory. Hence, no Lecturer can give applied classes virtually.

Applied classes are similar to former practical classes. According to the Protocol (page 6), in these classes applied activities will be carried out. They can involve activities using active methodologies of teaching-learning such as: study of cases, resolution of problems, computer assignments, learning based in problems, simulations, etc.

Complementary activities and exams are the last kind of formative activities considered as in-class teaching. This implies that attendance of both the Lecturer and the students is compulsory. Hence, no Lecturer can give complementary activities and exams virtually.

Complementary activities will last 8 hours and they are a new compulsory activity introduced in the Law Degree. They can either be specific to a group or be common to other groups of the subject of Public International Law. Moreover, they can even be common to all the subjects of the same year of the Degree.

The same expression of complementary activities is too broad. They can consist in either seminars of coordination, on methodology or concerning a specific problem or issue, or collective tutorials, etc. As a general rule, complementary activities will usually be carried out in the same classroom as theoretical and applied classes. Nevertheless, they can also be carried out in another classroom (since each group has another classroom available once a week, although it is reserved for complementary activities of all the subjects), and even out of the classroom (i.e. visit to the Depository Library of the UN). However, when that other classroom is needed, Lecturers shall contact the coordinator of the Law Degree. In all the groups of the subject Public International Law a compulsory common complementary activity will be developed, consisting in the introduction to the utilization of the United Nations database.

Regarding exams, they can last up to 4 hours in both examination sessions. In this section some ideas can be advanced that will be explained in detail in section 9 of this syllabus.

Undergraduate studies have introduced important changes with respect to the evaluation system that was followed in the old degrees. The final qualification of the subject is the result of a mixed system of evaluation of learning, which combines a global test on the teaching program of the subject (which until now has been called the final exam) complemented by a system of continuous assessment, which covers the evaluation of the work done by the student in three different training activities: applied classes, complementary activities and directed activities.

Supervised activities represent a non in-class activity. That is, neither are they carried out in the classroom, nor the Lecturer's attendance is required. Nevertheless, they shall be supervised by the Lecturer. They consist in the work that each student is expected to carry out on his/her own in order to prepare theoretical classes in advance (summaries of lessons, replies to certain questions...), which shall be delivered to the Lecturer. That is the reason why written essays carried out by students are known as deliveries.

Each of the 19 deliveries (as this is the number of chapters of the teaching program) implies an average of 1 hour and 53 minutes of work for the students. In consequence, the total amount of time devoted by students to carrying out the 19 deliveries is 36 hours.

Autonomous work is considered to be a non-supervised and a non in-class activity. Hence, students are expected to carry it on their own, with neither the attendance nor the supervision of the Lecturer.

This activity refers to the student's own work outside of the classroom and with no supervision or direction of the Lecturer, that is, his/her study of the teaching program (see supra, section 6) so as to acquire the necessary knowledge, competences and abilities in order to pass the subject.

Taking into account that each hour of theoretical classes shall represent at least two hours of study, this autonomous work is supposed to last at least 72 hours (as 36 hours of theoretical classes are given in this subject, since the first 2 hours of theoretical classes are devoted to introducing the subject).

EVALUATION

The evaluation system

Each professor may indicate in the annex to his/her teaching guide the existence of any minimum requirement to pass the subject (either in relation to the global exam or to the continuous assessment). If no minimum requirement is established in the annex, it will be understood that there is no minimum requirement in the global exam or in the continuous evaluation to pass the subject.

A- Written and/or oral test(s), consisting of one or more exams that may be objective, include theoretical-practical questions and/or problems.

B- Continuous evaluation of each student, based on regular attendance and active participation in the proposed face-to-face activities, such as the practical realization or participation in workshops, the preparation and/or delivery of papers, reports and/or oral presentations on such activities, individually or collectively, all taking into consideration the degree of involvement and effort of the student in the teaching-learning process and the skills and attitudes shown during the development of such activities.

C- Continuous evaluation of each student, based on the student's attendance to seminars or visits to institutions; and, where appropriate, delivery of papers, reports, reports and/or oral presentations on the activity carried out, individually or collectively, all taking into consideration the degree of involvement and effort of the student in the teaching-learning process and the skills and attitudes shown during the development of such activity.

Weighting

The overall test is to be valued between 50% and 70% of the final grade of the course, while the set of continuous evaluation activities is to be valued in the remaining proportion.
