SUMMARY

1) The subject within the context of the general study plan, associated subjects, continuity with other subjects.

1. Commercial Law I is a core subject studied over the course of one academic year that is taken during the second year of the Degree in Law. It consists of 9 ECTS credits (225 hours).
2. The two core subjects Commercial Law I (taken in the 2nd year) and Commercial Law II (taken in the 3rd year) provide the student with a general introduction to the function, concept and regulation of Commercial institutions.
3. In accordance with the description given in the Study Guide of the Degree in Law taught at the University of Valencia, the subject Commercial Law I is comprised of the following topics:

“The study of companies. The autonomous business-person. Company Law. Competition Law. Industrial Property. Bankruptcy Law.”

The subject Commercial Law II, in accordance with the description provided by the Study Guide of the Degree in Law taught at the University of Valencia, covers the following topics:

“Securities, The Bill of Exchange, The Cheque, The IOU. Commercial Contracts (both standard and non-standard contracts).

The topics covered in the two core subjects of the General Study Plan are complemented by three optional subjects in Commercial Law:

1. Banking, The Stock Exchange and Insurance Contracts
2. Competition Law
3. Transportation Law

2) A brief description of the subject, its content and its possible applications.

Commercial Law (Commercial Law I and II) is structured, broadly speaking, around three essential blocks or elements: business-people, the company, and the economic activity carried out by business-people via companies.

The subject Commercial Law I is divided into four parts and an introduction. The introduction to Commercial Law consists of (a) a brief history of the subject and an explanation of its relationship to other parts of the legal system (b) an examination of the constitutional framework surrounding Commercial Law in which students examine the freedom to conduct commercial activities as a right held by citizens, and the role of the intervention of public entities in the market in the context of a social economy (c) the study of the sources of Commercial Law.

The first part of the course studies the concept of business-people and businesses, and the various types of businesses that the law provides for. Particular attention is paid to commercial representation (factors, managers, agents, etc.), accounting obligations and the Commercial Registry.

The second part analyses the commercial activity of business-people through the medium of the company. This section of the course explores the legal and economic framework in which business-people and companies carry out the activity of producing, providing and distributing goods and services, and examines their economic constitution (in the treatises of the European Union, the Spanish Constitution and the Statutes of the Autonomous Communities), the configuration of a social-market economy, and Competition Law (anti-trust law and the legislation prohibiting acts of unfair competition).

This part of the course considers the legal institutions that permit companies to establish their corporate identity (trade names) and the identity of the products and services they produce or provide (trademarks and denominations of origin). It also looks at the institutions designed to protect industrial inventions and creative work (patents, utility models, industrial designs etc.).

The third part of Commercial Law I concentrates on Company Law, and in particular the legal form that companies generally assume (such as the public limited company and the company with limited responsibility), as well as other forms that they can adopt such as cooperatives and public companies.

The fourth and final part of Mercantil I examines the legal solutions to the economic crises that companies frequently face, and gives special attention to bankruptcy proceedings.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

The teaching methodology is adapted to the assessment criteria detailed in the annex attached to this study guide. It takes into account the options permitted by the general regulations and which are contained in paragraph 9 (for example, the programming of one or two complementary activities, or choosing to assess certain group or guided activities). However, in general, the methodology followed will share these basic characteristics:

1. The exposition of content. The classes will seek to encourage the active participation of the students in their own learning. The sessions will involve the discussion of hypothetical cases and problems, and the explanation of terms and concepts. They will rely to a large extent on the student having read and prepared the material contained in the set texts. The classes aim to be a series of informed dialogues, without prejudice to the faculty of the lecturer to provide detailed explanations on certain questions which may pose questions of particular complexity.

2. Practical and/or guided activities. Throughout the course the lecturer will introduce a number of activities that will consist of solving practical cases or problems, analysing and commenting on judicial judgements etc. These activities will be directly related to the material studied in class and the skills that the students are expected to acquire. They will serve to complement the explanations provided by the course lecturers and may require the student to work outside the lecture hall. These activities will obviously require the participation of the students and the lecturer will indicate which will be subject to evaluation. The lecturer may also programme, within the limits of the workload expected of the students, other activities that may serve to reinforce or revise course material

3. Complementary activities. At least one complementary activity, to be chosen by the course lecturer or proposed by the students, shall be included as part of the activities that require the compulsory attendance of the students. These may include attendance at conferences, seminars, or visits to institutions relevant to the course content.

EVALUATION

Final qualification is calculated by adding two different blocks/parts: on the one hand, the ongoing assessment and taking part in the planned activities (30% of the final grade) and, on the other hand, the final theory-practice test which represents 70% of the final grade.

Students have to pass the final test to pass the course. In the event of failing the test, the final grade in the record shall be determined through the weighted addition of ongoing assessment and the mark in the theory-practice test, which will in no way be higher than 4,5 (fail).

Final evaluation might take oral or written form depending on the lecturer's choice, and it has to be indicated in the annex to the syllabus.

- a) If the final test is a written exam, it will be a joint examination that shall be common to all groups. Students will be allowed to use legal texts. Answering space won't be limited and it shall not be a multiple-choice (quiz) test. However, time will be limited.
- b) In the case of oral evaluation, the lecturer has to indicate in the annex whether students may use legal documents for taking the exam. The lecturer will announce with at least 5 working days, through Aula Virtual, data concerning location of the exam, time, date and its maximum duration for each student and the order in which the exam will take place.

Regardless of the exam type (oral or written), it will be on the lecturer to include in the annex the possibility to change the exam type when a different day has to be appointed to solve an exams' overlapping situation in conformity with the Reglamento de evaluación y calificación de la Universitat de València.

The grade for the first sitting is formed by the result of the final test grade and the ongoing evaluation in the percentages stated above. As for the second sitting, ongoing evaluation block will be the one obtained during the year.

On-going evaluation activities (guided activities and complementary activities) can't be replicated for the second sitting whenever their nature makes it impossible to repeat a similar test that evaluates the training of the student. The lecturer will specify the latter in the annex, where complementary activities and guided activities that will take place during the course have to be detailed, too.

Despite having, fully or partially, participated in the on-going assessment, if the student does not show during the final test, the grade in the record will be NOT SAT. However, as an exception, if the student asks for it, and taking into consideration special circumstances, "FAIL" might be the grade in the record, considering only the weighed on-going assessment evaluation.

Activities that may be scored: final grade will be formed by the addition of the two following elements:

1. Final theory and practice test with legal materials support: 70% of the final grade.
2. Activities that may be scored (taking place during the lectures or outside that timeframe): 30% of the final grade.

Each lecturer has to define the activities corresponding to 30% of the final grade in the annex to the syllabus. There might be both guided activities and complementary activities. At least one activity has to be planned along the year. In any case, activities shall amount to 8 hours during the course.

2.1.- Guided activities: between 10-20% on the lecturer's discretion.

2.2.- Complementary activities: between 10 – 20% depending on the lecturer's discretion. These activities may consist of:

- Activities organised by the Department of Commercial Law for all groups.
- Activities arranged by a specific group lecturer or various course lecturers for their respective groups.
- Students may carry out complementary activities of their choice providing that these have been authorized by their group lecturer.
- Complementary activities may consist of participation in workshops, conferences, seminars, etc.
