SUMMARY

"ADR (Alternative Dispute Resolutions)" is placed within the litigation itinerary of the Degree's fourth academic year.

This subject offers a list of different non jurisdictional ways of access to Justice. It is analyzed from the point of view of the Anglo-Saxon trend that raises ADRs as alternatives to the current situation to be found in most countries. In particular, it is an initial approach to the various means of ADR: mediation, conciliation, arbitration, mixed figures as med-arb, ombudsman, etc.

After the conceptual and theoretical approach, the course will be completed with practical workshops of introduction to negotiation and mediation techniques, as well as the status of an arbitration proceeding.

This subject is the perfect complement to the knowledge acquired in Procedural Law, Civil Law, Private International Law, Commercial Law and even in Criminal Law, providing a theoretical and practical overview of ADR applicable to all these areas of expertise.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

This is a theoretical-practical course that makes it possible to achieve a sufficient knowledge that allowsto solve any questions that may arise in practice. Hence, the methodology will be:

1. On the one hand, the use of master classes for teaching concepts and principles. Classes which will build on the basic tools of educational texts, by using media like PowerPoint, among others.
2. On the other hand, within the framework of the implemented activities, we will work on the practical adaptation of the know-how through simulations. Mediation procedures with use of videos, practical application of mediation techniques. Simulation of oral sessions of arbitration during the classes, among others. This methodology is carried out through workshops.
3. Also, additional activities will be planned by organizing external sessions in the centers of mediation and/or arbitration, whenever possible.

EVALUATION

The skill assessment procedures will be:

- 70%: written test or oral objective examination, including theoretical and practical issues and/or problems.
- 30%: practical activities assessment, individual and/or in group, from the development and delivery of papers, reports and/or oral presentations, and participations an seminars.

-The score obtained in the continuous assessment will only be added to the score obtained in the test or the theoretical-practical knowledge assessment tests, if the latter reaches, at least, 50% of the maximum score established, either by adding the score of the partial test passed plus the final test, either by the score of the final test.
