SUMMARY

English Language VI is a compulsory third-year (second semester) subject that is part of the module English Language and Linguistics and the sub-module English Language in the English Studies degree programme of the Universitat de València (approved in 2010). It is also part of the Translation and Interlinguistic Mediation programme and of the English Studies minor in the Modern Languages and Literatures, Catalan Language and Literature, Hispanic Studies, and Classics degree programmes. In the English Studies degree, this subject is related to the series English Language I-VIII in the aforementioned module and also to other subjects in the English Linguistics sub-module such as English Phonology, History of the and Second Language Acquisition.

English Language VI does also acquaint the student with oral language genres and their communicative function in today's society. The course focuses on persuasive, informative and motivational speeches, storytelling and multimodal meaning creation in commercials, relating the linguistic choices and combinations to expressions of ideology, culture or attitude.

The aim of the course is to develop communicative skills in English (listening comprehension and oral expression, communicative interaction and mediation) up to Level C1 in multiple contexts.

At the same time, the course aims to promote autonomous learning, self-assessment, and remedial work with the lecturer.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

For students to reach the required level of English (see competence 14) and develop other competences which are also specified in this syllabus the following methodological approaches will be implemented:

- the teacher will formally present key concepts and also counsel, facilitate, organize, monitor, liaise, correct and assess students.
- the teacher will promote student-centred activities through some or all of the following: individual work, pair work, group work, problem solving, project work, and task-based learning.

Autonomous and/or group learning inside and outside the classroom, including computer-based activities will be encouraged.

Your teacher will give you information on requisites relating to attendance at the beginning of the course.

EVALUATION

Assessment breakdown for first and second calls.

A) Individual final examination that includes a use of English test, and a listening comprehension test: 50%

B) Final oral test: 30%

C) Activities carried out during the course: 20%

Total: 100%

To pass the subject students need to get at least 50% as an average of parts A, B and C. Students must also get 50% in each section of part A and a 50% in part B. If a student fails one section of the examination (part A) in the the first call, he/she would need to take all the parts again. The mark for the 20% of part C will be carried over to the second call. These activities (part C) can only be done during the course and cannot be handed in for the second call. The mark for these activities (part C) is only counted if the student passes parts A and B.

Assessment Criteria

Students will need to show that they have grasped the concepts introduced by their lecturer(s). They will also have to demonstrate that they have learnt the lexical, grammatical and functional items to be used in the multiple contexts seen in class.

Students will also need to show that they have attained a C1 competence level in and that they have acquired a satisfactory level in the other specific competences.

Plagiarism will not be tolerated; it is a serious academic offence. Any student who is found to have committed plagiarism in his/her work for the course will face serious consequences which will lead to failing the whole subject.
