RESUM

English Morphology and Lexicology is part of the module English Language and Linguistics and the submodule English Linguistics in the English Studies undergraduate programme of the Universitat de València. We offer a description and comprehensive analysis of the inflectional and derivational morphological system of English, lexical meaning, vocabulary growth and word formation patterns of Present-Day English. We also explore current issues in contemporary lexicography and corpus linguistics.

METODOLOGIA DOCENT

The structure of the course is as follows. Of the four hours per week two of them will be devoted to theory and the other two hours to practice and seminars. During the seminar and/or tutorial students will be asked to talk about or show the class activities proposed by the teacher.

The theoretical and practical contents will be presented in class. Students will have textbooks and course notes, which shall be deposited in our e-learning platform. Students are expected to read the material for the unit to be covered in the following class in advance. They should also show that they have understood all the examples that illustrate each point covered. During the practical sessions the teacher will promote reflection and debate.

The weekly practice and seminars focus on the assessment of classroom work on lexicology, lexicography, corpus searches, and also of those activities proposed by the teacher in the theoretical and practical sessions throughout the course. Attendance to all sessions is compulsory for all students. When established by the instructors, after the corresponding theoretical/practical sessions, the students will upload the activities to the e-learning platform.

AVALUACIÓ

Assessment breakdown for first and second call. Assessment will be made up of 2 parts:

Type of assessment	% of final grade
a) Individual written examinations, etc.	80 %
b) Portfolio tasks/Active Participation	20 %

To pass the subject students need to get at least a 5 out of 10 (parts a and b). The mark for the 20% of part b will be carried over to the second call.

Assessment Criteria

Students have to sit one written theory test. The maximum score of this test is 80 % of the final grade. The activities and practical work to be carried out count up to a maximum of 20 % of the final grade. The assessment of this work will be done regularly in class, seminars or tutorials. Competence at the B2 level CEFR will be taken into account in the students' assessment. Students will have to upload to Aula Virtual (tasks) all their work regularly during the semester (portfolio work) within the time periods the instructor has established. To pass the subject the students need to get an average of five taking into consideration parts a and b.

- Classroom activities and tasks uploaded to Aula Virtual are obligatory in order to get an assessment for classroom activities which are up to 20 % of the final mark. Note that this 20% will also be preserved for the second call.
- The written examination counts up to 80 % of the final mark.

Plagiarism will not be tolerated; it is a serious academic offence. Any student who is found to have plagiarised will fail the whole subject.
