SUMMARY

The subject Lecturas hispanoamericanas contemporáneas is part of the Spanish Literature module and the subject Literatura Hispanoamericana I, aimed at developing the general competences of a graduate in the academic branch of Humanities and, within it, in the Degree in Hispanic Studies: Spanish language and its literatures.

It is designed as a compulsory course to provide students with skills in the knowledge of the history of Latin American literature, highlighting its relationship with the society of the continent; that is, highlighting how literary phenomena are ideological-cultural responses (correspondences and not simply reflections), actively and organically articulated in each phase of social history. Specifically, the subject Contemporary Hispanic-American Readings aims to approach the currents, themes, problems and authors of Hispanic-American literature in recent decades.

By analysing the relationship between literature and society, this subject aims to develop a critical view of literary representations, especially in relation to representations of gender, race and social class. In this sense, the subject takes into account Sustainable Development Goals 5, 10 and 13. In particular, the development of tools for critical analysis of gender representations aims to contribute to "ending all forms of discrimination against women and girls". At the same time, the development of tools for the analysis of race and class representations aims to contribute to the "reduction of inequalities" both economic and based on ethnicity or skin colour. The syllabus also includes readings related to the climate crisis, which will contribute to problematising human action on the environment and to reflecting on its impact and possible ways of combating it, in the spirit of the 2030 Agenda.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

The teaching methodology of this subject is organised on the basis of training activities comprising:

a) Face-to-face training activities:

Theoretical classes: on the specific contents of the syllabus, the presentation of the most relevant aspects and problems in this respect, the state of the question and the critical approach corresponding to each one of them. In these classes, the problematisation and discussion of the proposed concepts will be stimulated in order to promote the participation and involvement of the group as far as possible. In order to follow these classes properly, the study of the complementary bibliography is recommended.

Practical classes: analysis and commentary of literary and critical texts, problematisation of the proposed concepts, practical orientation of the compulsory readings, discussion with the group, etc. The analysis of this material and the updating of the concepts presented in the theoretical sessions will be taken as a framework for discussion in these practical sessions, with the aim of stimulating reflection and active learning by the students. The teacher may recommend previous or complementary readings to stimulate debate.

Individual or group tutorials: oriented towards learning how to search for bibliographical information for study, to resolve doubts and methodological problems, to prepare correctly for the exam, to prepare research work and projects, etc.

b) Non-face-to-face training activities:

Independent study and work by the students in relation to the concepts and practices carried out in class, for the preparation of the activities and for the preparation of the final exam.

Reading of narrative, poetic and critical texts provided by the teaching staff at the beginning of the course, which will serve as material for analysis in class and as detailed study material for the exam.

Attendance at external events and activities: the teaching staff will propose complementary activities and events that, from time to time, may complement the development of classes.

EVALUATION

- The grade for the course will be obtained by means of a final exam, with an evaluation of 70%, and a series of activities carried out during the course, which will have an evaluation of 30%. A minimum of 5 points in the exam is a prerequisite for passing the course.
- The exam will consist of the development of a topic or a series of questions, in relation to the different topics of the course, the compulsory readings and the complementary bibliography. It will be available in the Virtual Classroom at least 15 days before the official date and should be posted as an assignment on that date. In this way, students will have that period to elaborate and write the answers, according to the specifications and guidelines (length, font...) given by the teaching staff. Delays will not be admitted under any circumstances, unless they are duly justified.
- In addition to the content provided, the teachers will assess the elaboration of the thematic presentation, the conceptual density, the personal contribution of significant quotations from literary works, the ability to relate to other subjects related to the content and the integration of bibliographic material (including that provided through the Virtual Classroom). Spelling mistakes and poor writing will be grounds for failure.
- Likewise, the use of sources without citing the source and the indiscriminate transcription of any information whose origin is not adequately detailed will be penalised (even suspended).
- The assessable activities will be explained and detailed at the beginning of the course by the teacher.
- In the second sitting, the part of the exam may be made up, but not the grade for the practical activities, which must be completed during the course.
- Intellectual honesty is vital in academic communities, and for the fair assessment of student work. All work submitted for this course must be original in its authorship. Papers that make use of fraudulent collaboration or composition with the aid of artificial intelligence (ChatGPT or others) will not be accepted.
