LEARNING OUTCOMES

a) Listening comprehension

Understand sentences and the most common vocabulary on topics of personal interest (very basic personal and family information, shopping, place of residence, employment). Can understand the main idea of short, clear, simple, well-structured statements and messages delivered by voice or by technical means, articulated at a slow speed, in a formal register, provided the acoustic conditions are good and the message is not distorted.

1. Identify the main points and relevant details in messages and public announcements containing instructions, directions and simple formalities.
2. Capture the essential information in direct or telephone conversations.
3. Understand the general meaning and relevant information of conversations taking place in their presence and identify a change of subject.
4. Capture the plot line and the most important episodes of recorded messages.

b) Oral expression

Produce short oral texts both in face-to-face communication and by telephone or other technical means, in a formal register, and communicate in an understandable way, although foreign accents, pauses and hesitations are evident and repetition, paraphrasing and cooperation of the interlocutors is necessary to maintain communication. Specifically, the following objectives have been established:

1. To make, in front of an audience, public announcements and short, rehearsed presentations, and to answer short, simple questions from listeners.
2. To be able to manage in a simple way in everyday transactions and formalities (restaurants, stores, etc.):
3. Show limited control of simple grammatical structures and sentence patterns within a memorized repertoire.
4. Be able to carry out very brief social exchanges, although without understanding enough to maintain the conversation on one's own.

c) Reading comprehension

Understand the general meaning and essential information, the main points or relevant details in short texts of simple and clear structure, in a formal register, referring to everyday life matters. In detail, the following objectives have been established:

1. Understand instructions, directions, and information from signs and posters in kales, stores, restaurants, means of transport and other public services and places.
2. Understand documents (forms, catalogs, electronic pages) and personal correspondence.
3. Capture essential information and locate specific information in illustrated brochures and other written information material in different formats.
4. Understand instructions on frequently used devices (a public telephone, an automatic teller machine, etc.).
5. Understand with relative accuracy a linear story or description.

d) Written expression

Write elementary and brief texts of simple structure in formal register, using adequately the resources of cohesion and the most elementary spelling and punctuation conventions. These texts will refer to everyday life issues. In detail, the following objectives have been established:

1. To write brief and simple notes and messages concerning matters that have to do with my immediate needs.
2. Write very simple personal letters.
3. Completing forms and questionnaires related to their daily activities.
4. Produce narrative and dialogic texts.
5. e) Know the basic vocabulary of everyday Russian life and use it accurately.

f) Know the basic structures and forms of the Russian linguistic system in order to use them fluently and correctly in oral and written production.

g) Become familiar with Russian cultural and pragmatic conventions.

h) Obtain the ability to make decisions and solve normative problems in an autonomous way from the location of relevant bibliographic information.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

The methodology used will be based on the action-oriented approach set out in the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages. Language learners should be considered as social agents, i.e. as members of a society who have tasks - not only language-related - to carry out in a set of circumstances, in a specific environment and within a specific field of action.

Accordingly, the following methodological principles will be followed and the following learning strategies will be used.

- 1) The teacher's role will be essentially to facilitate the students' participation in communicative activities, to evaluate their performance, to guide them with respect to it, and to indicate how they can develop their competences and their own learning strategies.
- 2) In accordance with the general and specific objectives established, teaching and learning activities will focus mainly on those activities that students will have to face in real communication situations -that is, comprehension, production, interaction and mediation activities-, through tasks that involve such activities.
- 3) Whenever possible, classes will be taught in the target language to ensure greater direct exposure to it.
- 4) Classes will be organized in a way that favors communication among students.
- 5) Follow-up of the principle of communicative competence of the students.
- 6) Consecutive development of the four skills: oral comprehension, oral expression, written comprehension and written expression.
- 7) Thematic and situational exposition of the learning material.
- 8) Execution of periodic written tests.
- 9) Use of all the direct material that stimulates learning through visual, auditory or mixed perceptions (blackboard, drawings, illustrations, crossword puzzles, tape recorder, video...).

10) Optionally, phonetic practice in the school laboratory.

The teaching and learning methodology is based on two types of activities (face-to-face and non-face-to-face):

a) Face-to-face training activities (which represent 40% of the ECTS credits, 2.4 credits, 60 teaching hours). In these training activities the teacher will mainly deal with the current academic regulations in force in the Russian language (rules concerning grammar, spelling, registers, etc.) and the uses that deviate from the norm, as well as issues related to pronunciation, correct oral expression and orthology; which will be the basis for the design of exercises and practical activities. These practices require a reduced number of students, since they involve a more individualized interaction, due to the correction of the texts.

Theoretical classes:

Theoretical classes on each of the topics of the program, according to the punctual development specified in each of them, supported by the reading by the student, prior or simultaneous to the explanations in class, of the recommended works or various texts supplied.

Practical classes:

Practical classes, in support of the theoretical classes, consisting of the practice of the skills. There will be a series of central themes of the practical classes whose debates or comments will be in charge of the students, under the supervision of the teacher.

b) Non-face-to-face activities and tutorials (representing 60% of the workload, i.e. 3.6 credits, 90 hours). This personal work may include the elaboration of individual or group work on normative issues, the resolution of activities and the preparation of the final exam. Also participation in videoconferences with native speakers. All this work involves bibliographical consultation, the promotion of a reflective spirit, and the active involvement of the student in the process of building his or her knowledge of the target language.

On the other hand, in addition to face-to-face classes, the student has tutorials, which can be individual or in groups. The teacher-student contact, initiated in the classroom, is consolidated in the tutorials in order to create a favorable attitude towards the subject that stimulates the desire and ability to continue learning. It is very convenient to make the student aware of the decisive role played by the tutorial, since it plays a fundamental role in the monitoring of the learning process, since, among other things, it allows the resolution of specific problems, whether individual or group, enables comments related to the bibliography and its possible extension, detects problems of reception and assimilation of the information provided, and facilitates the supervision of individual and team work.

EVALUATION

The evaluation fulfils several functions, which are closely related to all the stages of the teaching-learning process.

- 1.- To make the results of the process known.
- 2.- Motivation and encouragement of learning.
- 3.- Appropriate awarding of grades.
- 4.- Guidance to the student on his or her degree of progress.

Diagnosis and prognosis.

Promotion of students through the assignment of fair grades. 7.

7.- Feedback, reinforcing the necessary areas.

Teacher self-assessment.

9.- Planning of later stages of the process.

The continuous evaluation includes the sporadic control of class attendance, active participation in the classroom (tasks and activities, oral questions, collaborative attitude), etc. On the other hand, the summative evaluation is justified because it allows to evaluate the knowledge acquired and consolidated during the development of the subject.

In this subject the evaluation system will be based on the control of the competences that the student must acquire (theoretical knowledge and practical competences).

In general, the evaluation of the students' learning will be carried out from the combination of a final exam and regular class attendance together with active participation in the classroom (activities, homework, video communication, etc.) represents 40% of the final grade; but this formative or continuous evaluation is complemented with a final or summative evaluation (exams, tests), which allows to assess the overall academic performance of the student and represents 60% of the final grade.

More specifically, the evaluation of this subject includes oral, written, grammatical and lexical activities.

a) Listening comprehension:

- Multiple choice or true/false on general meaning.
- Short answer, fill in gaps and complete information from concrete information.
- Fill in with options.
- Match texts and titles or headings.
- From a series of options, mark those that correspond to the message of the text.

b) Reading comprehension:

- Multiple choice on the general meaning of the text.
- Multiple choice or true/false on specific information of the text.

- Complete the text with the correct option.
 - Filling in gaps in the text with a free choice.
 - Matching questions and answers.
 - Reinsert a series of sentences extracted from the text.
- c) Oral expression (pronunciation, fluency, correctness, lexical richness, interaction):
- Talking about oneself and other people.
 - Describing and commenting on images.
 - Dialogue or role-play.
- d) Written expression (spelling, cohesion, coherence):
- Completing a document (answering questions, filling in data).
 - Write a text of an instrumental type (notes, notices, postcards, letters).
 - Writing a descriptive or dialogical composition.

The assessment will consist of 2 distinct parts:

Type of evaluation:	% of the final grade
a) Individual written exam and partial tests	60%
b) Class attendance, class participation and practical activities.	40%

To pass the course as a whole it is necessary to achieve at least 70%.

Evaluation criteria

Theory

This is an individual written test related to the most relevant aspects of the course content. The type and structure of the test will consist of short questions that will be extracted from a battery of questions formulated throughout the course. The main difficulty for the teacher lies in how to evaluate students who have not been involved in their learning process (lack of attendance, little or no participation in the classroom, not doing the work, etc.). The only option that allows him to be equitable and fair with the class as a whole is to conduct a written exam on the contents of the program (60%) and require the corresponding course work (40% of the final grade).

Practice

Evaluation of the realization of practical activities, tasks and experiments that will be proposed in relation to the syllabus. In the practical activities and experiments the assimilation of the theoretical contents will be valued, as well as the originality of the approaches and the capacity to work in team in the appropriate cases. Throughout the course there will be tests of knowledge acquisition, the results of which will be informative for the student and for the teacher.
