TEACHING METHODOLOGY

Teaching and learning methodology includes classroom and non-Presential activities:

(a) classroom activities: two weekly classes; they represent 40% of the volume of work (60 hours). They are divided into theoretical and practical classes. In theoretical classes the professor will explain linguistic knowledge of the Chinese language, mainly, the vocabulary, grammar and also outstanding cultural information related to the themes of the studied communicative texts. The student must assimilate the class content and apply it in practice activities. At the end of the theory of each topic, they must make individual or group work both oral and written based on the knowledge acquired. These works will be presented in class under the supervision of the teacher.

(b) non-Presential activities: represent 60% of the volume of work (90 hours). Before the beginning of each topic, the student must prepare in advance the contents of the class. After the theoretical explanation in class, the student will do by himself exercises of the workbook that correspond to each topic. Later in class the correction will be carried on with the help of the teacher.

EVALUATION

The assessment will consist of two parts:

Type de assessment	% of the final
a) Continuous assessment	50%
b) Final assessment	50%

To pass the subject it is necessary to reach at least 50% of the total grade.

Evaluation criteria

Follow-up evaluation

- At the end of each two topics, there will be a control of learning, can be of type text, oral presentation or drafting. The maximum score of each control will be 20% of the final assessment. In total there will be three tests during the course.

Final Evaluation

- Consists of a written examination that covers all the skills which are taught throughout the course. The maximum grade corresponds to 50% of the course.

To the students that have not been as involved in their learning process, with low or no assistance to the class, they will require the completion of an individual examination writing (which will mean a 60% of the note) and the delivery of two formulations (minimum of 200 characters) on topics determined by the professor. To approve the student must achieve at least 50% over the total rating.

The teacher will indicate at the begining of course which parts can be considered in the second call exams.

Intellectual honesty is vital to an academic community and for the fair evaluation of the student's work. All work submitted in this course must be originally authored by every student. No student shall engage in unauthorized collaboration or make use of ChatGPT or other AI composition software.
