SUMMARY

In the subject Point of sales marketing, the operation of the various management and marketing variables at the point of sale will be analysed. Thus, in the context of retail commercial distribution, the behaviour of the buyer compared to the commercial establishment is analysed, investigating the factors that influence such behaviour as well as the process of selecting a point of sale. The next phase of the programming involves focusing on the spatial dimension of the commercial establishment, allowing the evaluation of the location option insofar as procedures are described to evaluate the economic potential of the area of attraction. After this geographical approach, we turn to the analysis of the marketing mix variables of the point of sale. We will study first the assortment and merchandising policy -implantation of the sections and the use of the linear- After the price policy and the problems of fixing and determining the margins; as well as the concepts of advertising and sales promotion in retail commercial distribution. And we will conclude the program describing the concept of service, and its incidence in customer satisfaction and in the evaluation of the quality of the point of sale.

The purpose of this subject is to provide the student with the knowledge related to the marketing strategy in the retail trade. It will consist of the theoretical-practical study of the nature and components of point of sale management

Topic 1. The scope of retail trade

The first part, which we have called "the nature and the environment of the retail trade". Aims with an introductory perspective, to locate the subject that is going to be an object of development, describing it as a part of the commercial distribution sector. This part performs a set of specific functions in the economic context; the approach to the marketing channel is also considered, analysing its structural characteristics, delimiting its content, and investigating its different modes of organization from the conventional to the integrated channel

2. SECOND PART. POINT OF SALE MARKETING MANAGEMENT

Topic 2. Selection of the market and location of the point of sale

Topic 3. Assortment management and merchandising

Topic 4. Pricing in the retail company

Topic 5. Advertising and promotion in the retail company

Topic 6. Technologies and the logistics function in the retail company

The second thematic block "marketing management at the point of sale" involves addressing the retailing mix. The spatial dimension of the commercial establishment is analysed first, allowing the location option to be evaluated insofar as procedures are described to evaluate the economic potential of the area of attraction. After this geographical approach, we turn to the analysis of the functions of: market selection, assortment and brand management, merchandising, pricing and advertising and promotion. Consequently, we will develop the nature and conception of the assortment, the merchandising policy - implantation of the sections and the use of the linear-, the price policy and the problems of fixing and determining margins and the concepts of advertising and sales promotion in the retail commercial distribution. In this part too, we will focus on the value that ICTs bring to the logistics function of the retail company

3. THIRD PART. THE BEHAVIOR OF THE CONSUMER AT THE POINT OF SALE

Topic 7. Management of customer relations: the quality strategy at the point of sale.

Finally, the third phase of programming involves focusing on "the behaviour of the consumer and the point of sale", thus describing the factors that influence the behaviour of the customer compared to the retail company. We will conclude the program describing the concept of service, and its impact on customer satisfaction and the evaluation of the quality of the point of sale.
