SUMMARY

The management of human resources and management are usually based on "directivist" principles. In this subject we will see how the particularities of the Entities of Social Economy begin with the break with these principles, as we know them.

In the case of Associated Work Cooperatives, for example, we find that the workers are at the same time the owners of the organization. And as such, through the representative bodies, the Assembly or the Governing Council, make their main decisions.

On the other hand, in the case of non-profit entities, the activity of human resources in their volunteer aspect requires management of the same. Having models for volunteer management and the motivation mechanisms necessary for the permanence and linking of volunteering are also relevant aspects to consider in this subject.

The most up-to-date human resources approaches, and especially the Strategic Human Resources Department (ERHD), conceive of managers as an action group (as well as an actor) of HRD. In the case of the Social Economy, this approach of collective actors and objectives of the actions, is the appropriate one.

In the classic vision of the Directorate that provides on the workers (if they are not controlled they are lazy and do not try), the application of the Personnel Department becomes much more complex in the Entities of Social Economy. But a more involved approach to the components of the organization becomes much more useful.

Although we see very few E.E.S. Which have advanced to the level of ERHM in its most directivist, strategic model, and the concept of Human Resources Units is especially valuable in an entity with cooperatives and labor personnel. To the HRM in the US New challenges and challenges related to gender and the incorporation of minorities and people with disabilities into the staff of the entity are added.
