RESUMEN

This subject aims to provide students with a detailed, and up-to-date vision of the different theories relating to the learning and teaching of a foreign language with special emphasis on the English language. Some of the most relevant theories about the acquisition of second languages will be reviewed in order to provide a theoretical foundation which will allow students to reflect on the learning process and at the same time prepare them so that they will be in a position to incorporate some of the most important concepts in their own teaching practice. In addition, the subject includes a description and analysis of the most relevant affective factors which are involved in the learning process: age, motivation, intelligence (Multiple Intelligence Theory), aptitude, etc.

DESCRIPCIÓN DE CONTENIDOS

1. Second language acquisition theories

In this unit I will review some of the most relevant theories about the acquisition of second languages in order to provide a theoretical foundation which will allow students to reflect on the language learning process. I include the classical theories on second language acquisition in the context of the so-called nativist, environmentalist and interactionist frameworks and also more recent theories based on psycholinguistic processes and information processing.

2. Affective factors in the process of language learning and acquisition

This unit includes a description and analysis of the most relevant affective variables which are involved in the learning process: age, motivation, intelligence, aptitude, etc. We analyze them and observe how they can affect, in turn, the teaching process. Some of these aspects will be studied in more depth, as for instance the age factor, in order for students to learn how to incorporate them in their methodology and when planning their lessons.

3. Language teaching methodologies

In this unit we take a close look at the most important methodologies in the teaching of second languages in order to prepare our students to incorporate some of the most important concepts in their teaching practice. We offer a historical review of some of the most influential methodological approaches and we analyse some of the most recent methodologies applied to the teaching of English as a foreign language.

4. Practical and methodological applications in the teaching of second languages: technological advances and the implementation of new technologies

In this unit we learn how some of the most recently implemented technological advances can be incorporated in the teaching of languages and how they can enhance the teaching/learning process. Blended-learning methodology will be the main approach dealt with in this unit. We will also analyze some practical examples of the use of ICTs in the classroom and some specific tools.

DISTANCE (ONLINE) LEARNING

1. Contents

The contents initially included in the teaching guide will be maintained.

The activities planned for the continuous assessment of the students will continue with the planned sequencing and timing. The percentage for the portfolio as reflected in the teaching guide remains the same as does the percentage allotted to the final exam.

2. Workload and teaching schedule

The weight of the different activities that make up the workload in ECTS credits reflected in the original teaching guide will remain the same.

3. Methodology

- Materials uploaded to Aula Virtual
- BBC Synchronous Video Conference
- Narrated power point presentations
- Meetings with students on the videoconferencing platform
- Exchange of emails and the use of the Forum in Aula Virtual

Students are provided with teaching materials consisting of power point presentations, videos, questionnaires, and other types of materials along with guides to help them work with the materials in each one of the units. These materials are uploaded weekly following the academic planner provided at the beginning of the course.

Narrated power point presentations are uploaded for each one of the units and this gives students the opportunity to ask questions via email after watching each one; the students are required to work with the materials corresponding to each week –according to the original schedule; emails are checked and answered daily. They also have to send the teacher the tasks required for each one of the units on a weekly basis. At the end of the course there will be a videoconference session to review the contents of the course so students can ask questions.

4. Assessment

The percentage given to each part of the assessment in the teaching guide remains the same.

20% of the evaluation, devoted to class attendance and participation, is maintained, but it has been adapted to the new circumstances. Students have to write a summary of each one of the narrated power point presentations, watch a series of videos and answer the corresponding questionnaires, write a short text including their reflection on particular topics included in the units, carry out the activities in the assigned book chapter, watch a series of videos about different TESOL methods and write a short text about which one they consider to be the most adequate and choose an example of implementation of a particular ICT tool or activity that they have experienced as teachers or students and write a short text about it. The activities are sent to the teacher at the end of the week in which the unit is presented.

30% of the evaluation, devoted to the oral presentation, is also maintained and the students have to record said presentation and send it to their teacher.

50% of the mark, devoted to the final written exam, is maintained, but it has been adapted to the new online environment. It now consists of 2.000-word essay on a topic assigned by the instructor.

THE ASSESSMENT BREAKDOWN FOR BOTH CALLS:

*Student attendance and active participation (20% of the final grade. If the student achieves a pass mark in the first call, the grade will be carried forward to the second call).

* Oral presentation (30% of the final grade. If the student achieves a pass mark in the first call, the grade will be carried forward to the second call).

* 2.000-word essay on a topic assigned by the instructor (30% of the final grade. If the student achieves a pass mark in the first call, the grade will be carried forward to the second call).

N.B. Please, note that plagiarism will not be tolerated; it is a serious academic offence. Any student who is found to have committed plagiarism in his/her work for the course will face serious consequences, which will lead to failing the whole subject.
